Consider These Findings From Local Research

In 2013 Workforce Planning Hamilton working together with Hamilton Immigration Partnership Council released a report on employer readiness to hire recent immigrants (arriving within the past 10 years) in Hamilton. A total of 318 Hamilton employers responded to the telephone survey. The Hiring Immigrants in Hamilton report is available at hamiltonimmigration.ca. Here are a few key findings:

Employers on the whole are very satisfied with hiring recent immigrants

78% of employers surveyed were very satisfied with hiring immigrants

Employers find that immigrant employees provide “added value.”

Many Hamilton employers stated that immigrants tend to be highly skilled, educated and hard working.

A significant portion of employers also hired immigrants to realize new business opportunities or help diversify their client base.

Employers rely heavily on informal methods of recruiting new employees and find it difficult to connect with appropriate job applicants.

Employers were for the most part open to hiring immigrants, but over 70% of employers across Hamilton are finding recruitment a challenging issue.

Word-of-mouth and personal contact are the most commonly used methods of employee recruitment, even among larger employers, which makes it challenging to recruit recent immigrants.

About Hamilton Immigration Partnership Council (HIPC)

HIPC is a community-based group whose mandate is to help newcomers successfully settle and in Hamilton and feel welcomed in their communities. Since 2009, HIPC has made significant progress strengthening community partnerships to coordinate and enhance the delivery of services to newcomers in Hamilton. HIPC brings together leaders from a number of sectors - including housing, health, employment, education, language training, research, settlement services, local government, businesses, community-based organization and the media - and truly leverages the collective power of the local community.

About the HIPC's Employment Working Group

The Employment Working Group works to better support and integrate immigrants to employment. The group is comprised of employment service providers who are working to provide support to employers to meet their recruitment challenges and focusing on introducing employers to the valuable talent pool that is immigrants in our community.

About Workforce Planning Hamilton

Workforce Planning Hamilton is a community-based organization that gathers local labour market information and works with partners with our community on workforce development initiatives. WPH recognized the value that immigrants bring to our local economy and partners with HIPC to promote the skills and talents of newcomers.
